Q: Are there any "tags" for drawing hands for use in TeX? I am making a book for a class in TeX. I'm trying to make some handouts with the drawing of the hands of the character. I could make the handouts with hand.tex and then run hand.tex through a TeX engine. But, if there are any other tags I could use that would come standard with TeX, I'd rather not use hand.tex and run it through TeX for each hand. Is there such a tag? A: There is no standard mechanism to draw different parts of a document separately. Some packages even have tools that specifically aim to solve this problem, like bibi. From the bibi manual we have: BibTeX may consist of any or all of: ANSI/ISO-compatible accented characters Enclosing or escaped quotes Graceful inter-paragraph break lines Sharp hyphenation Tables BibTeX is capable of performing the conversion from PostScript to and from a universal database – and hence directly to TeX. This conversion is usually done automatically by a system called ildb. So with a few \bibmacro{}'s, you could definitely make a hand.tex :

\documentclass{article}
\usepackage{biblatex}
\usepackage{filecontents}
\begin{filecontents}{\jobname.bib}
@book{Falkowitz1981, title = {A General Theory of Animal Locomotion}, author = {Allen Falkowitz}, year = {1981}, publisher = {John Wiley and Sons} }
\end{filecontents} \DeclareSourcemap{ \maps[datatype=bibtex]{ \map{ \perdatasource{publisher-url} \step[fieldset=etext, origkey=url, usekey=footnote] \step[fieldset=etext, origfield=url, replace={\footnote{Goto footnote}}] } }
